Why learning methods?

It is important to realise that teachers need to know different approaches so that he or she can choose the one that makes teaching more comfortable and the learning process easier for the students.

Let's start?

Now, we are going to talk about two of these methods:

The grammar-translation method and
The direct method

First of all...

The author of the book uses experiments to explain how the methods work. It is important to try the methods in fact, not only study them.

It is important to try the methods in class, because there are questions and answers that the teacher will be able to see just if he applies the method.

If the student can translate a text, both from his mother language to the target language and also from the target language to his mother language, then he or she is a successful language learner.

How is the interaction in this method?

There must be much interaction from teacher to students, a little student initiation and a little student-student interaction.

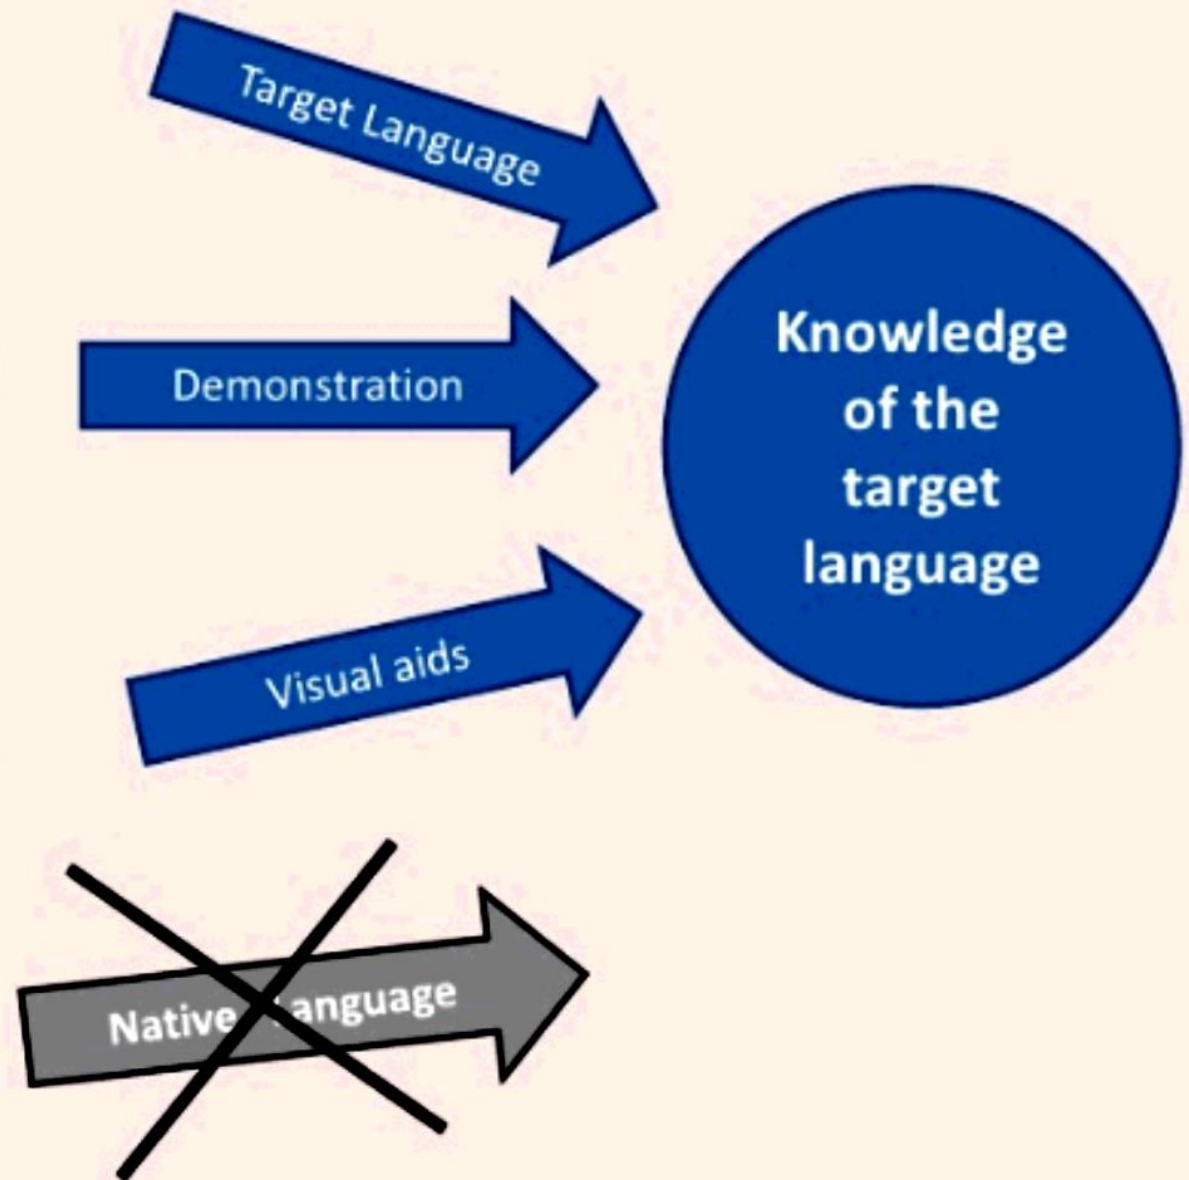

The Direct Method

This second method we are about to explain, differently from the one we have just discussed, has one basic rule:

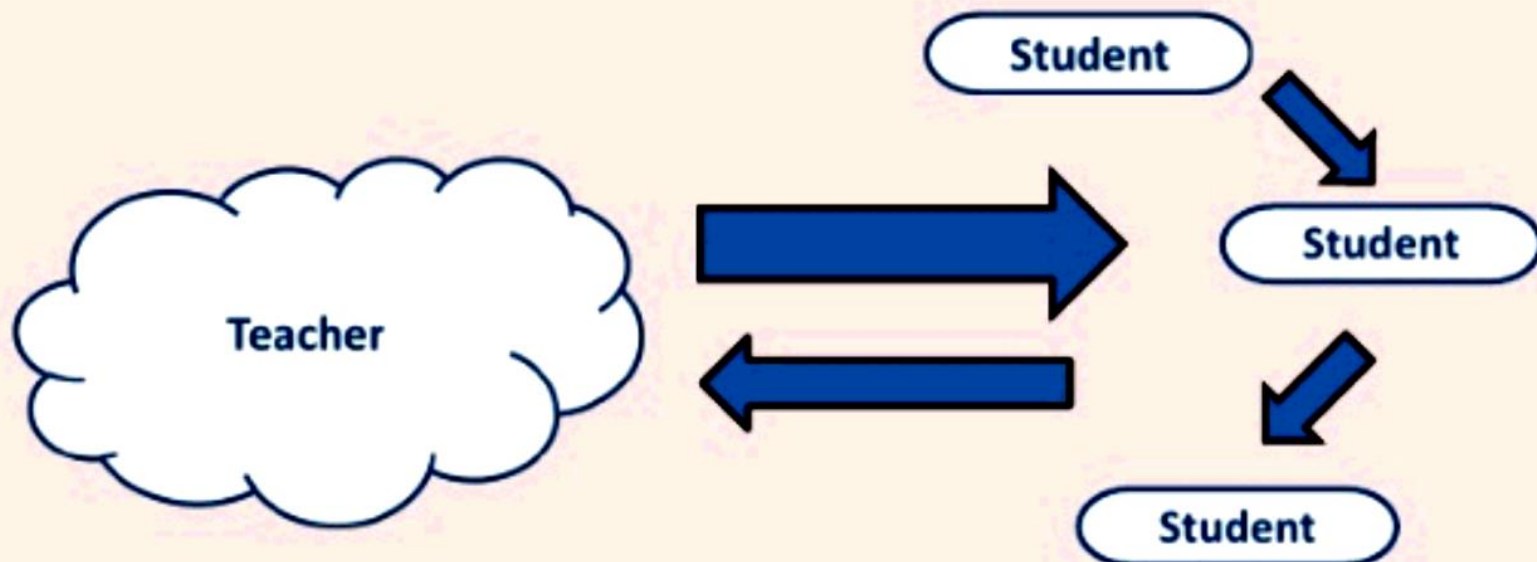

No translation is allowed.

In the class,
the teacher uses only the target language to make the explanations.

How is the interaction in this method?

There is a great student-student interaction and a significant student-teacher one. However, the 'teacher-student' interaction is the biggest one.

Comparing these two methods

Grammar-Translation Method

Main goal: Understanding

Role of native language: Crucial

How? Translating.

Skills: Reading/ Writing

Errors: Teacher's correction

Direct Method

Main goal: Communicating

Role of native language: Almost null

How? Speaking

Skill: Speaking

Errors: Self-Correction

A similarity

One aspect that these two methods have in common is the role of the teacher. In these two methods, the teacher is the one responsible for providing the knowledge (in this case the new language) to the students.
