

14 Genius inventions that solve problems

Done by: Shakhnoza Khamrayeva

This T shirt with a built in eyeglass cleaning device

This pill of bottle that tells you how long its been since you opened it

These signs in Australia

Time to Go Home Thierry Covolo

We were lying on the beach. Marie, who felt the cold less than me, had gone for a swim after our picnic. She had come back to lie next to me, without drying herself. She liked to feel the sun on her wet skin. She would close her eyes and keep still. Then she would go back for another swim when her skin was dry.

From time to time I would sit up to look at the time. I had slipped my watch into one of my shoes, near my feet, to protect it from the sand. It was only a fifteen euro trinket that I had bought on the spur of the moment. A reaction to Marie's sigh when I had mentioned buying myself a smart watch. Marie and I had reached Eubéens Island by crossing the sandbank which linked Chevet Point to the archipelago at low tide. There were lots of people crossing on foot. The sky was a clear blue, free of any clouds, it was hot, and the tide times favoured lunch on one of the island's beaches.

However pleasant it was, a visit to the island required you to be vigilant. The island was only accessible for about five hours. Missing the return time meant calling for help or waiting for the next low tide. Nine hours later. Trapped on that tiny island. A sign, painted on the rocks, reminded you that it was private. No hotel, no restaurant. Not even a refreshment stall. Every year, careless people got caught out. It was my responsibility to keep my eye on the time. So I regularly took my watch out of my shoe.

This printer can be found in airports

The dog-friendly staircase

21.04.2021

This bathroom stall has a groove the door fits into

This mirror is heated so it won't fog up while you're in shower

21.04.2021

This spatula has a little stand so you don't get food on your counter

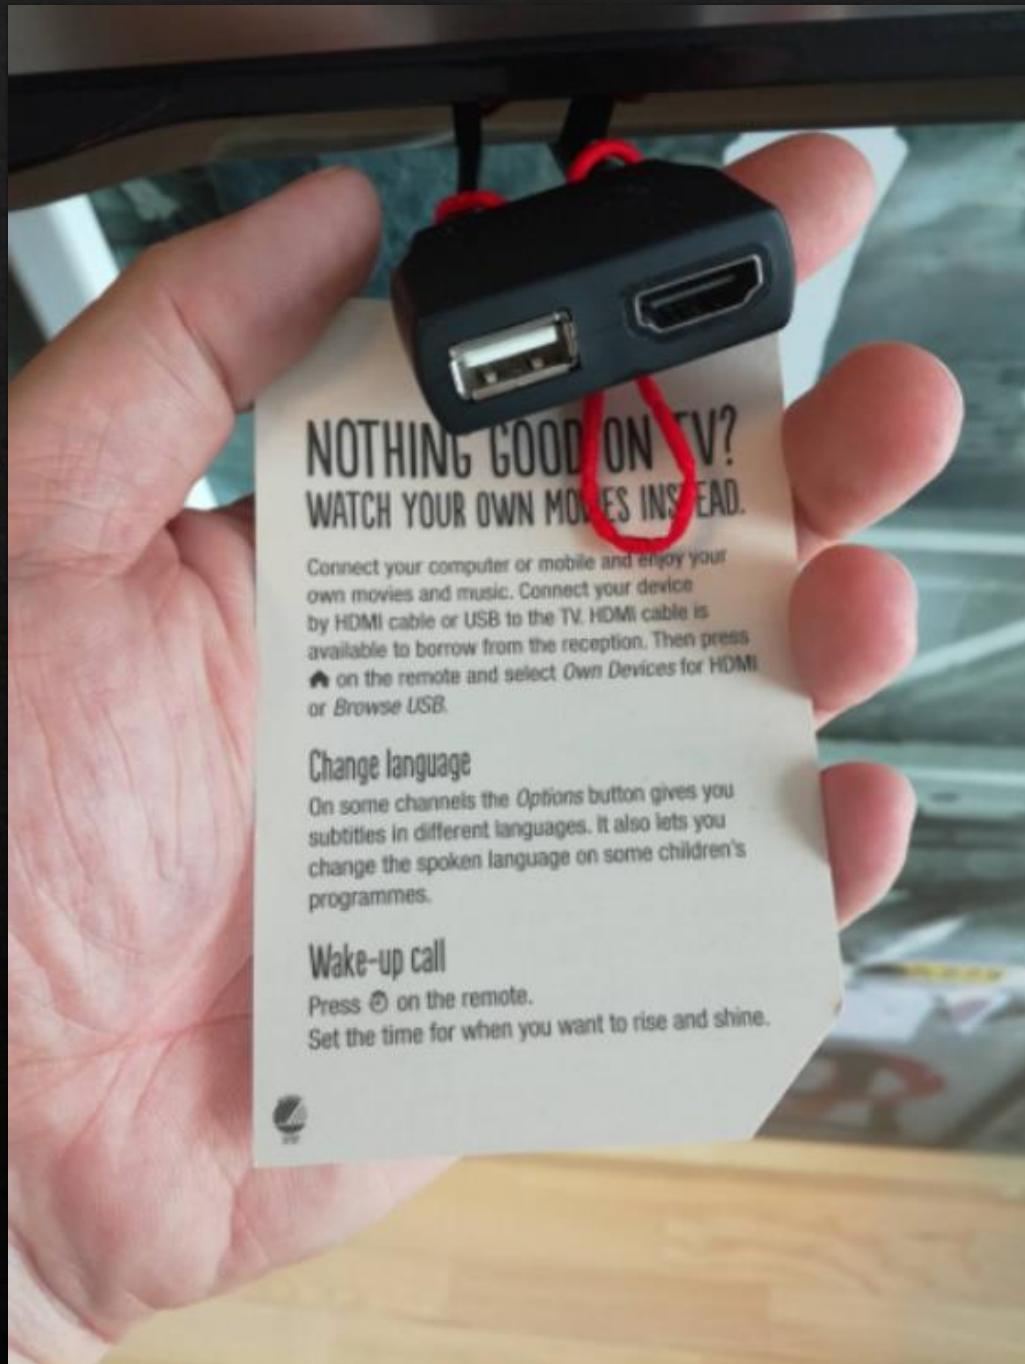

21.04.2021

These shopping baskets solve the problem of overzealous store employees asking whether you need help

These room numbers are created by shadows

This hotel provides easy access to the USB or HDMI ports

This newspaper has 2 pages of wrapping paper included

21.04.2021

This toothpaste lists all ingredients, where comes from and what it does

This coffee shop is doing its part in eliminating beach litter